at a time it becomes difficult to determine exactly what made the kart better or worse. Ultimately, you want to be able to change a setting, anticipate what it is going to do, and then feel that change on the track. Many drivers think that the kart's chassis setup can be established in a standard way for each individual track.

The starting point is obviously the frame, which in turn is the result of a series of procedures designed to weld together the tubes of which it consists. Basically, the big difference in the process is represented by manually welded frames and those that use an automated and robotised welding process. The result, in the end, is the same: a chassis that is ready to form the backbone of a kart.
