As a musician looking to improve quickly, picking one solo or phrase to focus on is much more effective and beneficial for your playing than rushing to learn 10 or 20 solos at once. The transcription process is more important than memorizing hundreds of solos note for note and this is what will serve you well in developing a jazz vocabulary.

For me, this was a transcription born of a sense of great nostalgia, mixed with my great love and admiration for the playing of Freddie Hubbard. As I have re-read the analysis, as presented here, it almost appears as though a couple of phrases and one very idiosyncratic trumpet ornament were the sole reasons for making the effort to transcribe this particular solo.

Freddie Hubbard "Latina" Solo Transcription and Analysis ...

Here's a transcription of the other horn solo on that track, Freddie Hubbard's concise but forcefully direct one-chorus statement. It's the immediacy from the first few notes that really struck me hearing this solo: straight out of the head, there's a declarative quality to the solo (there's something about the fifths in bars 2 and 3 that stand out).

Freddie Hubbard on "Fee-Fi-Fo-Fum" - Kevin Sun

Christian McBride's Solo on "Blue Monk" is drenched with soul and a sense of the tradition. The ideas on this solo never stray too far from the blues but not one idea is lacking in sophistication. Christian McBride has really set himself apart from so many bass players because of his ability to play double-time...
